THE BONE CANCER RESEARCH TRUST

One of my closest friends was diagnosed with Ewing's Sarcoma back in March after breaking her femur and has been undergoing treatment since then. After months of leg pain, which the GP told her was just vitamin D deficiency, it was only when she broke her leg that she was finally diagnosed. Having spent five months in Addenbrookes Hospital, she had surgery during the summer and is now able to be based at home as she continues her treatment. The Bone Cancer Research Trust is dedicated to fighting primary bone cancer through research, information, and awareness of bone cancer, especially in young people.
